How to read your diary

Two minutes with a pen, once you have at least a week of entries.

Three steps

1. Count your entries. How many rows did you fill in? Write that number here: N = _____
2. Count each trigger. For every trigger, count the entries where you ticked it, and write it in the table.
3. Work out the share. Divide each count by N. A trigger ticked in 8 of 10 entries shows up in 80% of your flashes.

Presence isn't proof. A trigger that appears in most entries may just be a normal part of your day, like morning coffee. To check, change one thing at a time for a week and see whether the pattern moves.

A diary can't diagnose anything. Bring it to your appointment: concrete notes give your clinician more to work with than memory does. Hot flashes can have causes other than menopause, so frequent, severe, or unexpected symptoms are worth a check-up.
